John Tory, MPP

Leader of the Ontario PC Party

(speaking at the CLF Lessons Learned conference)

“The Prime Minister thinks what you’re doing here this morning is spectacular. He’s ready to form a majority government and he needs your help.”

“This is where the campaign managers come from. Whether it’s this election or the next election. You’ll find that most of the campaign managers who you meet are 30 or 35, they went to these sessions years ago.”

Hon. John Reynolds, PC

National Campaign Chair
Conservative Party of Canada

I did attend these training sessions. This is really high-end skills training. You're actually learning some skills that will allow you to manage people and manage campaigns. They become automatically kind of the upper echelon of any political organization as a result of this course.

Hon. Tony Clement, MP PC

CBC

“The next generation of conservative political players.”

“This weekend is not just about training. It’s also about access. The students rub elbows with some Conservative heavy hitters.”

I have found the Conservative Leadership Foundation to be an investment in the party's future. It trains the leaders of tomorrow and prepares youth like no other. It melds a leadership convention, a nomination, a federal, provincial, and municipal election into one weekend that leaves the participants mature beyond their years. I myself have gained valuable experience from being both a participant and a speaker at CLF

Patrick Brown, MP

CLF 2001 student participant

International Young Democrat Union Executive Secretary

CLF Team Leader 2002

Initiatives like the CLF are essential for the future and success of the conservative movement in Canada. Conservative parties at both the provincial and federal levels will benefit from the focus, energy and vitality generated from this training program. The corps of young conservative volunteers trained by the CLF will be an important asset for our next election.

The skills that I obtained through my participation in CLF, particularly those involving leadership, communications and team building have provided the foundation of my success to date. CLF was created in 1990 to ensure that conservative-minded youth received the best campaign training available at a school of their own. I believe that conservative youth must take an active role in not just working on campaigns, but leading them. Nowhere else can you learn these skills than at CLF.
